His style was very influential and was described as the basis of American primitivism, a term borrowed from painting and referring mainly to the self-taught nature of music and its minimalist style. Notes Acoustic. Signature time 4/4. 84 measures. Seven pages. Tuning 2'c 4'c 5'g 6's Sunflower River Blues - guitar melody by John Fahey. It's not a standard 12 bar blues and doesn't apply a triple feel to the game, so it has more folk guitar sounding rather than the standard blues melody. He plays Key C on a guitar tuned to Open C, and at 4/4 time. Above the video I play the melody along with the tab. In this post I'll give some tips on playing tunes. Here's a downloadable tab for Sunflower River Blues Tab music - Power Tab - PDF - TXT Intro - This tune has an intro section that goes from bar 1 - 9. The tempo of the intro is much slower than that of the main body melody. I've added a pace of rubato musical direction means that the timing is flexible, so just play as you feel You don't have to play strictly at the pace. The main section - This is the main body of the melody. He is played at a much faster pace than the intro and playing the tempo means he has to play at the right time as opposed to the intro. There are three separate parts in the main part of the music. There is a main building and two separate sections of the bridge. Order on the main tab - bridge 1 - main - bridge 2 - the main. However, with all these parts I recommend changing the order to satisfy yourself. I would also recommend adapting sections of the bridge to your liking, or even writing new ones. Tempo - The tempo of the main body melody is pretty fast. I often play it slower than John Fahey does in the original because I find it sounds better a little slower. However, play the melody at any pace you want, and like all the fast pieces, start by playing slowly and then build speed. Right Hand Fingers - The thumb plays bass notes and index and middle, or index average and ring fingers play high notes, which is standard for fingerstyle guitar. Left hand fingerings - The left hand fingerings are simple and you should be able to select most of them from the video. Slides - There are numerous slides into the melody. They all play like legato slides meaning you hit a string (s) slide on the appropriate fret, but don't hit the strings again. When you play the power tab it sounds as if you're hitting the strings again, but it's just a bug in the software. They are labeled as legato slides in the tab. Most slides are self-evident and play as written. However, in bars 11, 15, 35, 39, 59 and 63 there is a small legato slide down from fret 2 worry 1 that doesn't seem obvious. All you do is move your fingers shape to the fret 2 down to disturb the one that will create the slide. However, the sound of this slide is not essential and should not be emphasized or well worded during the game. Note Flexibility - Like all these tunes in open settings there is some flexibility regarding the notes that you can play. Because the tun is in C key and the guitar is tuned to Open C, you can easily add open string notes without sounding out of sorts. So it's worth a hang out with the music and add or remove some notes as you see fit. The whole melody is pretty simple in the game and one you have to have a lot of fun learning.
